
There are many Indian restaurants and Chinese take aways on the streets,...

... but there are no Korean restaurants

Then I found that they had a new dish called
'Korean Spiced Chicken'
on their menu

A Chicken Wing Brought a Tear ta my Eye.

Indian food and Chinese food are very popular Asian foods in the UK.

Then a while ago,
something got me very excited.

A pub near us changed their menu.

I can find a Korean restaurant or a Korean supermarket if I visit a different city but...

... it was a totally different feeling that I could see Korean food being introduced in a British pub.

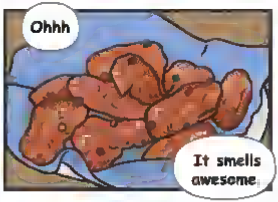
We were waiting for a long while becouse it wes o busy Saturday evening, finally our food arrived on the toble.



It was topped with chopped spring onions and red chilly peppers. The chicken's spicy and greasy smell stimulated my nose.

I tasted the chicken nervously.

The taste was...

To be honest,
I was half in doubt because it might not have been the right flavour even though the name was Korean.

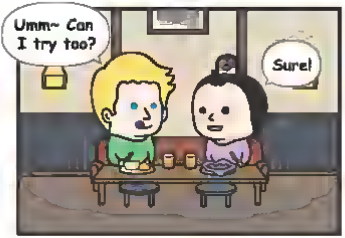
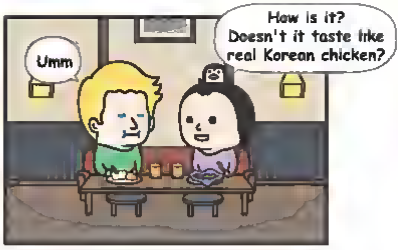
But this chicken was true to its name.



After Mev saw that I was satisfied, he decided ta taste it as well.

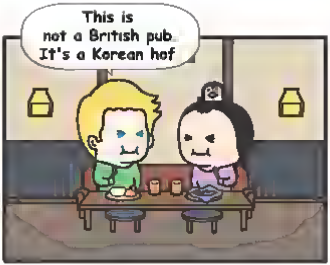


I watched him eating with excitement.

Then suddenly Mev put up his hand high and said.

*Ajeosi: middle-aged man, mister

*Soju please! Where is Soju?
*Soju: Korean distilled spirits



One that day,
we tasted Korea.
